As I understand ectopic heartbeats, the heart doesn't actually stop (the pulse does). What happens is that another part of the heart muscle initiates the heartbeat, which means that it beats, but fails to pump, the heart continues to fill with blood and when the next correct beat occurs (usually within 1 or 2 beats) the heart is fuller than normal and you can get a sensation of the thump in your chest.

Sudden cardiac arrest (SCA) is also called sudden cardiac death. En espa\u00f1ol. Sudden cardiac arrest occurs when the heart suddenly stops beating, which stops oxygen-rich blood from reaching the brain and other organs. A person can die from SCA in minutes if it is not treated right away. Sudden cardiac arrest is not a heart attack, even though you may hear the terms " heart attack " or "massive heart attack" used to describe it.

Heart Palpitations at Night: Causes, Treatment, and Prevention
Usually this feeling is caused by an extra beat (premature beat or extrasystole) that happens earlier than the next normal beat, and results in a pause until the next normal beat comes through. People are not usually aware of the early, extra beat, but may be aware of the pause, which follows it (the heart seems to stop).
