These one and two-day courses are aimed primarily at extending skills in handling sailing yachts under power in the marina. At crew request there may be time to include handling under sail in close quarters manoeuvres. For most people the area that is of greatest concern is simply getting the yacht into and out of a marina without fuss or drama. Add some wind, perhaps a cross tide at a lock entrance, a tight berth and a few spectators and

Boat handling characteristics under power, depends on a number of factors such as engine size, propeller location and rotation direction, keel type and rudder, and the amount of windage above decks. Long-keeled yachts with their rudders hung on the back of the keel make boat steering difficult going astern and may be impossible to get the yacht to reverse astern in a straight line.

Boat designer Harrison Butler was "a strong believer in the 'metacentric shelf formula' to achieve good balance and handling under sail. The theory held that as a yacht heels under sail, its balance will depend on the immersed form of the hull, with different sections exerting varying degrees of buoyancy and aft sections possibly being more buoyant than forward sections.
