The image of Jesus Christ has been and almost certainly will remain one of the most popular themes for collectors of Byzantine coins. Though there is a general consistency in the numismatic portrayals of Christ, there still are enough differences to make it possible to build a meaningful collection on that basis alone.

The material for these coins came chiefly from the confiscation of church plate. They were named after their weight of six grammata (6.84 grams), and probably valued at 12 to the gold solidus . [2] [3] The Hexagrams uniquely carried the inscription of Deus adiuta Romanis or "May God help the Romans"; It is believed that this shows the desperation of the empire at this time.
