Meticulously reported, with the perfect blend of amusement and respect, Rapture Ready! is the story of Daniel Radosh's investigation into the wondrous but deeply weird world of Christian pop culture. This sprawling subculture — a $7 billion industry and growing — provides crucial insight into the social, spiritual, and political aspirations of evangelical Christians.

Radosh's "Rapture Ready" offers an interesting tour round various aspects of US evangelical popular culture. Some of what he covers — e.g. aspects of the popular music scene — are likely to be known about only by those with a special interest in that material, while others — e.g. Christian commercial wrestling — are both odd and covered very nicely.

Rapture Ready was a little different than I thought it would be. Given that the author was a writer for The Daily Show with Jon Stewart, I thought this would be a humorous look at some of the excesses of far-right Christian culture, set on skewering the people who embody the worst hypocrisies of calling yourself a Christian while showing little compassion or understanding for your fellow humans.
