Icing (food) - Wikipedia
In aviation, icing conditions are atmospheric conditions that can lead to the formation of water ice on an aircraft. Ice accretion can affect the external surfaces of an aircraft - in which case it is referred to as airframe icing - or the engine, resulting in carburetor icing, air inlet icing or more generically engine icing. These phenomena do not necessarily occur together. Both airframe and engine icing have resulted in numerous fatal accidents in aviation history. Not all aircraft ...

Icing conditions - Wikipedia
In ice hockey, icing is an infraction when a player shoots the puck over the center red line and the opposing team's red goal line, in that order, and the puck remains untouched without scoring a goal. It is not icing if the puck enters the goal, even if it was shot from behind the center line. If the puck crosses the goal line completely, the goal is counted.
