April~~ Written Lives Javier Marias Javier Marias never met any of the writers he covers in this sometimes fascinating and at other times inadequate book. It is a book of description and Marias readily admits to treating its subjects and sometimes their lives as if they are characters in books rather than once living writers.

In these short, capricious and irreverent portraits of twenty-six great writers, from Joyce to Nabokov, Sterne to Wilde, Javier Marias, winner of the Dublin IMPAC prize and author of the bestselling A Heart So White, throws unexpected, and very human, light on authors too often enshrined in the halo of artistic sainthood. Revealing that Conrad actually hated sailing and Emily Bronte was so tough she was known as 'The Major', among Translated by Margaret Jull Costa. First published in Spain as Vidas escritas, 2000; US, New Directions, 2006 'Writers are monsters', said Hilary Mantel in her introduction to Elizabeth Taylor's Angel (the VMC edition) – which I made the title of my post about that novel. Many of the 26 writers that Javier Marías includes in this idiosyncratic collection would readily fall into that category.

Javier Marías - Wikipedia

Javier Marias's WRITTEN LIVES is superbly gossipy. Its subject is a group of 20 writers chosen by the author in a manner "entirely arbitrary." This (arbitrariness) adds an additional layer of variety and surprise to the list, which includes Conan Doyle, James Joyce, Henry James, Nabokov, Lowry and Kipling.
